The beauty of nature can be appreciated in every creature and place, from a tiny, squirmy worm to the majestic, rushing Niagara Falls. In Kenneth K. Chan's new poetry collection, A Night of a Blue Bird, both the small and the sublime are examined and celebrated. This collection opens with a wistful poem full of fond memories and features both the titular bird and the poet examining his past. Chan is inspired by the events of his own life and touches upon nature, philosophy, love, and humanity. He's led two lives: one as a brilliant scientist and one as a thoughtful poet. The two converge in his work, and Chan combines his scientific skills of observation with witty and warm commentary. In other instances, he is inspired by events from the outside world. A chance article in a newspaper inspires the heartbreaking An Alzheimer's Love Story. A worm's valiant journey is the subject of Worm Tracks, and Chan even writes about famous personages such as Robin Williams, Steve Jobs, and Salman Rushdie. Chan pours his soul into his work, and it shines through in his precise, often whimsical words and his beautiful imagery.
