Excerpt: . . . 11 Programs are delivered across the country to approximately 14, 000 sites. Topics include community emergency exercises, hazardous materials emergencies, evolving trends in fire service emergency medical systems, the impact of natural disasters, and ways to help senior citizens and persons with disabilities in emergencies. Viewers include employees in the fire service, police, state and local government, transportation, and private industry. Programs are typically 4 hours, although some last up to 40 hours. Participants are sent appropriate materials. EENET also encourages partnerships with other federal agen-cies and industry. For example, FEMA worked with the Envi-ronmental Protection Agency, the Department of Health and Human Services, the Department of Transportation, and the Chemical Manufacturers Association to present a workshop on hazardous materials. Additional cooperative efforts have been discussed with the Department of Defense; the Food and Drug Administration; the Department of Energy; private corpora-tions, such as the Hospital Satellite Network; and the Law Enforcement Television Network. While EENET does not replace the campus learning environ-ment or major courses or workshops, it does provide college-accredited training and education activities that are easily accessible and are presented by nationally recognized experts in emergency management fields, with immediate feedback to, and interaction with, students across the country. ortune 500 firms The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) has also initiated a Fsurveyed by the FAA distance learning program to make training available to an implemented major increasingly large audience and within budget constraints and interactive distance learning programs to reduce co. . .
